In secret journalism, a pistol in the belt is a necessary argument.

und Italien

ICH HABE IN DIESEN JAHREN (1914-18) MEINEN TEIL MITGEKAMPFT, NICHT DAMIT SÜDTIROL ZU ITALIEN KOMMT, SÖNDERN DAMIT ES GENAU SO WIE JEDES ANDERE DEUTSCHE LAND DEM VATERLAND ERHALTEN BLEIBT

Die Schuld am Kriege

ES IST GRÜNFALSCH, DIE SCHULD AM KRIEGE VON DEM STANDPUNKTE AUS ZU ERÖRTEREN, DASS NICHT NUR DEUTSCHLAND ALLEIN VERANTWÖRTLICH GEMACHT WERDEN KONNTE FÜR DEN AUSBRUCH DIESER KATASTROPHE, SÖNDERN ES IST RICHTIG, DIESE SCHULD REST LOS DEM GEGNER AUFBURDEN, SELBST WENN DIES WIRKLICH NICHT SO DEM WAHREN HERGANGE ENTSPROCHEN HATTE restoration of the majesty of the law. All want the best relations with our neighbours. All defend the same right to independence and to our own territory. If you speak of political trends, there is only one now in Poland."

As I was walking back through the London streets I thought about the sentence which had particularly caught my attention. "All we stand for is the restoration of the majesty of the law," Mr. Arciszewski had said. Did he mean the abolition of the lawlessness brought about by foreign occupation, against which his militia fought, or did he mean that all over the world the rights of common people must be secured?—he spoke about social reforms in Great Britain. Or he might also have meant a democracy in a still wider sense, not only among individuals and classes, but among nations, a democracy in which the rights of every nation would be honoured—he mentioned international treaties.

And if treaties and international conventions were not honoured, if prisoners of war were murdered, towns through which foreign troops pass turned into heaps of ruins? Eventually all institutions of the civilised world would be abolished by the wild mob, and our civilisation, based on Christian principles, would collapse.

"All we stand for is the restoration of the majesty of the law." I again recalled the words of the Polish Prime Minister, and experienced a feeling of complete calm and security. By reminding the world of the necessity of the rule of law, Poland is adding one more contribution to the Allied effort. Is this not the very thing for which British soldiers are fighting, far away from their homes?
